Changes in the World

It is becoming obvious that there are major changes coming in the world. I am definitely not a Prophet, but I do have a significant amount of education and experience when it comes to the way the world functions. I do have the belief there are a few things that have a very high probability of taking place soon. First, I think we will likely see an event of destruction here in the United States. Second, I think there will be a call to engage in world war 3, inspired by this event. Third, we will lose the war and our economy will be devastated. Fourth, the value of the dollar will probably be cut in half by the time the war is over, and will then continue to decline for a few years. Finally, the United States government will no longer provide the services it is providing now, so the States will reorganize into three or four different countries to continue to function.

I of course do not know for certain, but I have been carefully watching this for 35 years now, and it is just becoming more obvious to me that time is getting short regarding these things. I personally have to make decisions regarding what I will do for the next 8 years in preparation for something as dramatic as this, and of course if by some miracle the people making the decisions can find a way to extend what will ultimately happen, I will be thankful.

I remember what happened when the World Trade Center towers came down. There was a huge uproar of people wanting to go to war. I was very concerned about the details people were ignoring that indicated there was a lot of dishonesty about what happened and who was involved. I am now very concerned about a destructive event that will be blamed on a country that had nothing really to do with it. What was very noticeable to me was that the following Sunday the churches in this country were filled with empty people. They were all there for their own personal reasons, but whatever they were, most of the people gradually returned to their normal lives and forgot about the Lord. There were some who continued to pursue a knowledge and understanding of their God.

I was not in the ministry back then. I was teaching Computer Science at the University of Colorado. To me it was a huge opportunity as there were a lot of discussions about faith, and how it affects people's lives. I was able to interact with a handful of people who I had access to, and I could see an increase in openness to consider the things of the Lord.

Today is very different. Living God Ministries has a huge collection of audio files people can listen to, and I expect a flood of new people discovering us soon after this high probability destructive event. We are known well enough that we will be mentioned as a good place to go, and we are prepared to respond well to a surge in interest.

The outreach we are doing through the radio stations is a very cost effective way of reaching out to new people. Your donations make this possible and I do know it is worth it to support Living God Ministries. Making donations is about us working together to reach more people with the New Covenant. You can do other things to reach out to people yourself, and I do want to encourage you to do what you can. I personally have been doing two things outside of Living God Ministries to reach new people. The first is producing videos and posting them on YouTube. I have been meeting a lot of new people I am sure I would not have met otherwise. The second is through producing books, and I do have one that is just about ready to be made available.

This is a wonderful time in history to be alive and participate in people's lives. Changes bring new opportunities. When people see the importance of peace, they will also want peace in their hearts. Jesus is the only peace we will truly know.

Most Sincerely,
Aaron
